Below are two passages. Each passage is followed by 5 questions. In each question, there is a blank that you need to fill in with the correct answer based on the passage content. Each answer should be no more than three words.

Passage 1

China is not only famous for its cute pandas, but also for the animal's favourite food—bamboo. China grows the most bamboo in the world. That's why it got the name "Kingdom of Bamboo". Bamboo has a very long history in China. The history of Chinese people planting and using bamboo goes back about 7,000 years.

Chinese people have used bamboo in many ways. For example, the plant was once an important building material in China. People used it to build houses, bridges and so on. Even today, we can find some of such buildings around us. In the past, people also made bamboo into rafts (竹筏) to get across rivers and lakes or to go fishing. Today, in some places, it's still possible to take a ride on a bamboo raft. In the past, before Chinese people had paper to use, they used bamboo as "paper" to write on. What's more, Chinese people have used this plant to make food, play music and so on.

Bamboo also has a special place in Chinese culture. Chinese people believe that bamboo is a symbol of good character. It grows straight and tall. It's so strong that it can stand (承受) bad weather. And its green colour is a good example of elegance (雅致). So, Chinese people love bamboo very much. Su Shi, a famous writer of the Song Dynasty, wrote in his poem, "I would rather eat no meat than live without bamboo." Do you love bamboo?

Passage 2

With about 60 days left before the exam, time is getting tight. This year's test will be held on April 17, which is one day earlier than in previous years. So from now on, we should review in an orderly way, instead of studying randomly or panicking at the last minute.

After the Spring Festival, the most effective method is practice. Do more exercises every day, especially reading and grammar questions, and summarize your mistakes. Each time you get something wrong, ask yourself: Was it vocabulary, grammar, or fixed collocations? Then write it down and review it again.

Blue Man's suggestions are following. If your foundation is weak, put your energy into vocabulary first, because words are the key to understanding passages and choosing correct answers. If your foundation is strong, shift your focus to grammar and fixed collocations, since these points decide the final score.

If you still want to improve another 5–20 points, you can also consider Blue Man's intensive sprint course（冲刺课）. It offers focused training, high-frequency exam points, and targeted practice to help you break through your score bottleneck in the final stage.

Finally, I truly hope every student can stay confident, keep improving, and enter the university you dream of.

With about 60 days left before the April 17 exam, students should ___22.___ in an organized way and avoid last-minute panic. ___23.___ the Spring Festival, doing daily practice—especially reading and grammar—and summarizing mistakes is most ___24.___. Students should check whether errors come from vocabulary, grammar, or fixed collocations, and review them repeatedly. Blue Man advises weak students to focus on ___25.___ first, while strong students should focus on grammar and collocations. Those aiming to gain 5–20 more points may ___26.___ his intensive sprint course. Best wishes to all.

Part IV Reading Comprehension（20%）

Directions:

There are 2 passages. Each passage is followed by 5 questions, including four short questions and one translation item. Please answer these five questions based on the content of the passages and write your answers on the answer lines.

Passage 1

September is a big month for students in China since the new term begins from now on. Because in ancient China, the school entrance ceremony was one of the most important ceremonies.

Children began school between the ages of 4 and 7 in ancient China. Since there was no certain time to begin a new term at that time, the most important thing for parents was to choose a lucky day for their children to enter school. Next, parents would prepare some school things for their children, including desks, chairs and four treasures of the study.

On the day their children entered school, parents would take them to take part in the First Writing Ceremony. Before that, children would kowtow (叩头) to the statue of Confucius (孔子像) 9 times and then to their teacher 3 times to show their deep respect (尊敬). During the ceremony, the teacher would put a red point on the students' forehead (前额) as it meant opening the wisdom eye. Children would also ring a certain bell to start a new term. After that, they could finally sit down in their seats and begin to study. The First Writing Ceremony was a very important ceremony for every student.

Every day, students would arrive at school earlier than their teacher, and kowtow to the statue of Confucius, and then go back to the seats. Usually the teacher would give every student a new name, which was used for future Imperial Examination (科举考试).

Today, some schools are starting to hold an entrance ceremony like they did in ancient times. Students put on traditional costumes and bow to the statue of Confucius and their teachers. This means that from this moment, they take a step in the lifelong journey of learning.

Passage 2

The air is thin and we have to rest several times on the short hike from camp. To our left, snow-covered mountains disappear into clouds that seem almost close enough to touch. On the plain in front of us, we can just make out a herd of graceful animals. This is why we’re here—to observe Tibetan antelopes (藏羚羊).

Tibetan antelopes live on the plains of Xizang, Xinjiang, and Qinghai. Watching them move slowly across the green grass, I’m struck by their beauty. I’m also reminded of the danger they were in. They were once hunted for their valuable fur.

My guide is Zhaxi, a villager from Changtang. He works at the Changtang National Nature Reserve. The reserve is a shelter for the animals and plants of northwestern Xizang. To Zhaxi, the land is sacred (神圣的) and protecting the wildlife is a way of life. “We’re not trying to save the animals,” he says. “Actually, we’re trying to save ourselves.”

The 1980s and 1990s were bad times for the Tibetan antelope. The population dropped by more than 50 percent. Hunters shot antelopes to make profits. Their habitats became smaller because new roads and railways were built.

In order to save this species from disappearing, the Chinese government placed it under national protection. Zhaxi and other volunteers watched over the antelopes day and night to keep them safe from attacks. Bridges and gates were added to let the antelopes move easily and keep them safe from cars and trains.

The measures were effective. The antelope population has recovered and in June 2015, the Tibetan antelope was removed from the endangered species list. The government, however, does not plan to stop the protection programmes, since the threats to the Tibetan antelope have not yet disappeared.

In the evening, I drink a cup of tea and watch the stars. I think about the antelopes and what Zhaxi told me. Much is being done to protect wildlife, but if we really want to save the planet, we must change our way of life. Only when we learn to live in harmony with nature can we stop being a threat to wildlife and to our planet.

32．Where do Tibetan antelopes live?

33．How did Zhaxi and other volunteers keep Tibetan antelopes safe from attacks?

34．When was the Tibetan antelope removed from the endangered species list?

35．Why did Tibetan antelopes' habitats become smaller and smaller in the 1980s and 1990s?

36．Translate the underlined sentence "In the evening, I drink a cup of tea and watch the stars." into Chinese.
